Any changes you make to the content of an image are made on the actual `_image layer_`, which is the part of the image that shows up when the image is viewed. Image layers support the following functions: Color and Opacity (color overlay): You can adjust the color you see in an image or make it completely transparent. Shadows and Highlights: You can adjust the level of darkness or light in an image, whether it's totally dark or totally light. Move or Copy Layers: You can move, copy, or delete a layer. New Layers: You can create new layers and combine them with other layers or merge layers together to create new layers. Move or Combine Layers: You can move a layer up or down in the layers hierarchy or combine layers from two or more different layers into one. Recolor Layers: You can change the color or tint of any image layer. Adjust Layers: You can adjust the density of individual image layers or adjust all the layers in an image at once, including opacity, blur, and size. Smart Objects and Layers This feature is often called content-aware fill. You can select areas of an image that you want to change and "fill" them with new content, such as a color other than the original. You can also modify pixels as well as other properties of an image. Image layers work together with the `_Smart Objects_` feature to

Q: Product space and sum of the induced metric The subspace $X \subset Y$ is called a quotient (Hilbert) if Y is a Hilbert space and there is a norm continuous isometric (i.e. a linear map with a $1-1$ inverse) operator $Q: Y \rightarrow X$ such that $Q(y_1 + y_2) = Q(y_1) + Q(y_2)$ for all $y_1, y_2 \in Y$. An example is given by quotient maps on the (infinite dimensional) Hilbert space of square integrable complex valued functions. A property which is crucial for this analysis is that a linear subspace of a Hilbert space is always a quotient, if it is closed and is mapped isometrically onto a subspace. It is not clear to me why the sum of the induced metrics is a metric. I'm looking for a proof of that. A: I found an answer in a thesis. Lemma 8.1.8. is used there. It is a textbook problem in functional analysis. Frequency of migraine and headache in different patterns of migraine with and without aura according to subgroup. Q: How to get Ajax results to work after textarea have lost focus I'm writing an Ajax call and a textarea. After the textarea has lost focus on the browser window, the content of the textarea (text value) is preserved. The function that is supposed to work with this content is not getting the message from the textarea. It is preserved when the textarea has focus, but with losing it, nothing gets done. Is there a way for me to get results of the Ajax call at the same time that the text area lost its focus? function testAJAX() { if (jQuery('#textbox').val() == "") { jQuery('#textbox').val(999); } jQuery('#button').hide(); var value = jQuery('#textbox').val(); jQuery('#info').html(value); jQuery.post("ajax2.php", { post: value }, function(data) { jQuery('#response').html(data); jQuery('#button').show(); }); } I don't know if I have to add any post request code. Thanks. A: This should do the job. The important part is the line: jQuery('#textbox').blur(); The following are some reasons why it will work: When the textbox loses focus, it will call the blur method. It means that the element will be put in "not focused" state. So, if you're using JS to call back your function, it's a bit safer than using a direct JS way (by using .focus() or .on('focus', fn)). Now, even if JS is not invoked, there should be some time intervals, which is caused by a browser. It should actually do some job during the timeout before actually calling the blur method. The AJAX request is called only after the user has actually clicked on the
