On Sunday, President Donald Trump reaffirmed the importance of human rights in his first speech before the UN General Assembly. "We challenge every country to embrace the responsibility of protecting human dignity," the president said. He also pleaded for the world to act: "We are asking the nations of the world to join together to confront forces, within and outside, that threaten all of us." Trump's comments at the UN address were a departure from the rhetoric of his campaign, which was rife with threats to withdraw from the organization and to ignore its demands to act on human rights issues. After his inauguration, he signed a two-page, single-spaced, blank order that one senior administration official described as a "piece of paper we can wave" at the world to get everyone to pay attention. That strategy clearly backfired. A report on the UN's annual human-rights review released on Tuesday says no improvement has been made by any country's "actions" in implementing 16 of the 193 U.N. member states' recommendations. The world's most egregious offender, the report says, remains Saudi Arabia, where widespread discrimination continues against women and minorities, with executions rising 17 percent last year. The kingdom's public beheadings continue at a steady clip. The report also warns of "widespread impunity for violations of human rights" by states that have adopted a policy of non-response to human-rights abuses, such as Belarus, China, Russia, and Turkey. Less is known about when and how states will punish their troops. "It is unclear what punishment states enforce against their own nationals and what kinds of personnel they compel to carry out such practices," the report says. The U.N. Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights will continue to monitor compliance with its 2016 recommendations, including the prevention of any "recurrence of the sexual violence and exploitation of women and girls by members of the military or armed forces." The U.N. will seek further information and will also ask states to develop legal guidelines for military forces to prohibit sexual violence. The president's "Who is America?" foreign-policy speech in April included no mention of human rights, no reference to �

Character Creation:

Choose your gender before starting to create your customized character. As you delve deeper into the creation screen, you will find more and more features to choose from. Make the most of your character in various ways with 8 different hair colors, 21 different items and 3 colors of eyes, and 10 different face sculpts.

The number of times you are able to create your character cannot be changed. You will not be able to change your initial hair style or face sculpt even if you buy a second customization.

If you have a problem with the appearance of your character, contact our Customer Support.

Class Key Features:

Select from 2 classes and 8 different skill trees. Equip up to 5 different weapons. Whenever you want, you can strengthen your character. You can also adjust your equipment after forging an Elden Ring.

Class Screen:

Choosing a class is quick and easy.

There are 16 classes that can all be combined to create a raid class.

The strength of the classes you get with each completion will change according to the class you become.

You can see the class details by pressing the menu button.

Character Creation:

In order to make more creative characters, you can use the various features available from the creation screen as described above.

Ranks:

Ranks are the strongest points you can get when you train your character. Gathering wealth is good but does not guarantee a rank. The amount of points you get increase the higher the rank. The maximum rank increases the more you train your character for a given number of days. The training points you accumulate will gradually lose their points when you are carrying out non-RPG activities.
