how to make python file download faster I have a python script that I use to download youtube videos. The script works great but it takes about 15 minutes to run. How can I make it run faster, so that it will allow me to build a queue of videos and then download them? This is the code that I have so far: import urllib2, base64 from hashlib import sha1 #from six.moves import urllib ytmlfile = open('youtube_urls.txt','r') files = ytmlfile.read().split(' ') #ytmlfile.close() def get_video_info(video_url): f = urllib2.urlopen(video_url) info = f.read() info = info.split(' ') return info[0] def base64_encode(data): enc = base64.encodestring(data).replace(' ', '').encode("base64") return enc.decode("utf-8") for url in files: url = url.split('=>')[1] info = get_video_info(url[:-1]) #This is the part where i find and download the videos savedata = base64_encode(sha1(info).hexdigest()) video_name = "file_name.avi" open(video_name,"wb").write(savedata) A: If you're using Python 3, you could use the requests library, because it is faster than urllib2. For example: import requests for url in files: url = url.split('=>')[1] info = get_video_info(url[:-1]) #This is the part where i find and download the videos savedata = requests
