~~~~~ As you blink the grogginess from your eyes, you remember what's happened and why you are here. You woke up lying in the deep brush of the forest, with the hunters "The White Stag" still close to your trail. To protect you, he will bring you back here when you are in danger. This is the game you always dreamed of playing, as you desperately follow the trail of clues, you must seek the salvation of your life. This is The Hunt.

~~~~~ {END OF DESCRIPTION}

Thanks for reading and good luck with the game :D -KP- A: Colossal Cave Adventure You are being chased by a white stag through the forest. You can only see the back of the stag, but you know it's there. The forest seems to have no end. You have no weapon and no idea how to proceed. Should you turn around, and follow the trail back to the house? But the stag could have left a marker at the house; it could be waiting there for you. And you don't want to face it directly. You only have one chance to escape. You came from the house. You can only go to the right, forward, to the left, or back. This is a game of exploration, map reading, and problem solving, and a touch of luck. You must find a way to continue that will avoid dead ends and provide a path to the end. The path through the forest is suggested and given. You are being tracked, so there are many challenges to be overcome and a lot of what happens in the game happens unexpectedly. If you follow the path and take the right route you have the chance to walk the length of the screen without hitting a wall. You could be trapped on a narrow path with no way to go forward. If you decide to travel left you have the chance to get lost in a maze of blind alleys. Or you could find a safe path that will deliver you to the end. I played through a sequel of this game but did not want to replace the original CCA. While this is a very different game, if you liked CCA then you will like The Hunt. It will play more or less like CCA but also have new twists and have some new puzzles.

GUNSHIP PODS for iOS * All screenshots were taken using a real iPhone 4. All iPhone screenshots were taken using an iPhone 4 on iOS version 4.1.1 There is nothing particularly engaging about GUNSHIP PODS, other than the fact that it is challenging to shoot up four enemies while you're also in the midst of a small fistfight with your malevolent alien. Unlike the other iOS titles in the action-brawler genre, GUNSHIP PODS isn't a game designed to push your iPhone to its limits, with no copious hardware drain, but more of a game that forces you to explore your iPhone's inner engineering. In other words, GUNSHIP PODS is a game that's probably best played with your iPhone's battery fully charged. And while none of the game's component parts are visually appealing, they work together nicely to produce a game that's fairly entertaining in the brief span it lasts. The controls consist of two buttons and a thumb: Tap the left side of the screen to flick the thumb left to your right; tap the right side of the screen to flick the thumb right to your left; tap the bottom of the screen to slide the thumb down to crouch; and tap the top of the screen to slide the thumb up to jump. You'll notice that this is not just a one-dimensional jump button like those in other games. While in the air you can tap on the screen to open and close your hands. This is how you gain that extra boost when you land. GUNSHIP PODS will be a difficult game for many players, even for those who own the original iPhone. There are four main challenges to the game: 1) air combat, 2) jumping and dodging, 3) punching enemies, and 4) collecting weapons and ammu-bursts. Air combat is the game's name for when you have to fling your pod into the air and then shoot enemy planes while you're in midair. You'll also have to dodge all manner of thrown items, shoot at blobs of enemies moving across the ground, and ride shotgun on missiles headed straight for the enemy. To maneuver through the air, tap on the bottom of the screen to spin your pod left to right. If you go too far, tap back and you'll land. You can also tap on the screen to slow down, which will allow you to make tight turns and gradually increase the spin rate. But if you stay

What's new:

The concept of the "Zone of Death", as it is commonly known, stems from the seminal work of Roger Neitschke, PhD. in which it was concluded that the decision to initiate CPR is the most critical decision of all in a SCUBA drownings. In this article, we will discuss the pathophysiology of SCUBA induced DCS/Hypoxia and how it relates to "the Zone of Death" as it is commonly known, why the "Zone of Death" exists, and how it relates to "Don't Rescue Drownings" along with the decision making process and effect it can have on the death rate of a drowning casualty, recommendations will also be given for follow up measures after being rescued. Pathophysiology of DCS/Hypoxia Drowning (also commonly referred to as submersion) is a leading cause of aquatic injuries worldwide. The concept behind drowning is of a loss of buoyancy and the body, by this time, is no longer able to be resuscitated by breathing at a dive depth. Drowning can be long lasting and the effect can be devastating. The percentage of drownings that will result in death depends on the number, size, and species of the casualty. Human beings in water have 3 fundamental needs: Breathing (air), Locomotion, and Nutrition. Depending on water and depth combined with the prevailing environmental temperature and buoyancy during the drowning event, there are many different situations in which the body may be exposed to these needs. The first and most critical of these needs to be met by the body is the desire to oxygenate the blood in their cardiovascular system. This can be done a number of different ways: Ingestion of oxygen from the atmosphere, Ingestion of oxygen from their own O<sub>2</sub> stores, Intra-arterial infusion of oxygen by syringe or equipment or intramuscular injections of gases. The next most essential of these needs is the treatment of hypovolemia. This again is an interplay of blood volume, circulation and delivery of blood through the capillary bed. Before addressing the circulatory therapy, it is of vital importance for the rescuer to ensure a patient has properly been resuscitated from the waters. This can be done through regular monitoring of their bladder function for lower extremity edema and blood pressure checks. Without adequate circulatory support, the results of this body structure interaction may lead to drowning-induced circulatory arrest and/
