Block out the Noise: My Survival Guide Today I'm making a list of the Top 10 things to get you through this crazy life. The best way to get stuff done is to plan it out and make a list. If you're like me, you get too excited and dive into whatever you're doing. As a result, I now have an amazing list, a list so big it makes me feel sick. Here it is: 1. Draw it out—draw out the system. Designate a specific hour every day for working on your business and your sales. I have a daily block of time for email. This frees up my mind to be productive and creative for the rest of the day. I also give myself a time to play, whether it's working on my playlist for the week or my diary.

2. Do one thing at a time— this is one of the biggest reasons people fail. If you're a musician and making a new album, do not start writing songs for next month's album. Start with one or two songs and work towards writing the rest of the album. Same applies to business. If you plan to launch a new business or a service, start one thing at a time. If you start too many services at once you'll put yourself into survival mode and none of them will get done. Don't try to write the 5 books you want to write. 3.

Write it down— make a list of everything you'll need to do. I also write down all the things that I'd love to do. This is great for motivation. 4. Share it with people— the biggest mistake I made was trying to do it all alone. I needed the backup of a partner or an accountability buddy to keep me on track. Find the right person to share what you're doing with and keep you on track. 5. Start at the top—you'll be surprised how much you can achieve every month. You need to tackle the most important thing first. If you start too big, your energy will be drained and you'll never finish. 6. Break it into small pieces— again, planning is vital. I keep my goals in different tasks. This way if one task gets too big, I can move it over to the following month. 7. Forgive and forget—

Top-down versus bottom-up attentional control in people with developmental dyslexia and dyscalculia. Successful development and learning depend on two types of attentional control, top-down and bottom-up. By top-down control, we mean a voluntary, goal-directed and controlled attention to one aspect or domain of the world, whereas bottom-up attention is automatic and insentient processing of information in the environment. This study compares the strategies used by children with developmental dyslexia and dyscalculia to perform a task where bottom-up attentional control was involved with visually presented numbers and letter strings and top-down control was involved with auditory stimuli and two-digit numbers. The pattern of results indicated that the performance of children with developmental dyslexia was poorer than that of the control children when the task required top-down attentional control, but comparable in the bottom-up condition. Children with developmental dyscalculia performed similarly in both the top-down and bottom-up conditions. Results are discussed in relation to the ability to voluntarily inhibit attentional control and difficulty with impulsive responding in people with developmental dyslexia. [Transparency International's Corruption Perceptions Index 2010]. This paper shows how Transparency International's Corruption Perceptions Index (CPI) of 2010 reflects the power and relative strength of different parties in a particular country. It was also intended to explore possible connections between selected factors that may be responsible for the emergence of particular parties in a country and their power or dominance in the CPI rankings. The analysis reveals that the CPI rankings of a country reflect the interests of, and the level of political competition and fragmentation in that country's political system.

For the Czech Republic the results provide evidence that the Prime Minister's Party of Free Citizens (SMER-SD) was the strongest political party. The results also provide evidence that, when the prime minister's party is excluded from the ranking, the domination of the remaining parties in the ranking remains fairly similar, although their strength, or absolute and comparative power, is somewhat lower. Uradhi Baat Uradhi Baat (Gujarati: ઉરદિબાત) (English: Eyes) is a 1972 Gujarati language dramatised biographical novel based on the life of the 19th-century Gujarati poet, Balbhadra Venkata Phadke. It was first published in 1967
