Correlation of clinical and histological findings in skin lesions of Indian children. Tuberculosis is one of the most common opportunistic infections that result in a huge burden of illness, mortality, and economic losses among children. The number of children affected by tuberculosis is increasing worldwide. Its diagnosis, especially in resource-poor settings, is often difficult, time consuming, and expensive. Objective of the study was to examine the correlative histology of skin lesions and clinical observations. In this cross-sectional study, the skin biopsy, clinical data, and routine laboratory findings were obtained from a number of young children with skin lesions and were correlated. Thirty-four children, 18 females and 16 males, with age of 10.3 ± 2.3 months (2-12 months) and weight of 9.3 ± 1.2 kg (5.5-13.8 kg) were included in the study. Cutaneous tuberculosis was diagnosed on clinical and histopathological findings in 16 (47.1%) patients. The youngest patient was 2 months and the oldest 12 months. The age-wise distribution of the patients revealed that 75.0% (18/24) of patients were below 4 years of age. The most common skin lesions were papules and maculopapular rashes (19), followed by papulonecrotic tuberculid lesions (14). There were 2 nodular tuberculids and 1 leprosy. The commonest histopathological lesion was tuberculoid granuloma (75.0%) with caseous necrosis in all the biopsy specimens. Tuberculous lesions and sarcoidosis are the commonest causes of skin lesions in young children, and histopathological examination plays a pivotal role in diagnosing these conditions.Q: R - Convert data into "dataframe" I have the following data: > x = data.frame(m1=c("001", "002", "003", "004"), m2=c("001", "002", "003", "004"), m3=c("001", "002", "003", "004"), m4=c("001", "002", "003", "004")) m1 m2 m3 m4 1 0001 0001 0001 0001 0001 2 0001 0001 0001
