Ioncube Php Encoder Nulled 46l ~UPD~

hi thanks for checking back in. you are correct, the new encoder will not encode the folder structure. however, the new loader will automatically re-encode all the assets on a site at build time. we are still working on adding a way to only encrypt files on your page and then sending the final assets to the client. at this point we will not be able to do anything beyond what you will be able to do with the old encoder. we wanted to get the encoder out as soon as we could so they could be tested. there will be a script called on_build that will automatically encrypt all of your files. that way we can see what the encoder does as well as get feedback. there may be other factors but i don't think there's a simple fix like most of the new updates we have recently. like the custom field support on your current site. the [xt]_sys_update_files and [xt]_sys_update_components is now using magic fields which has caused a lot of the issues with the old encoder. the issue with the new encoder was that it didn't handle php files efficiently and it was difficult to update via the interface. most importantly, the encoder was limited to only 10 files at a time and the files it changed would not update the cache, so any changes in the files would not be reflected. creating the actual codes are beyond the scope of this article, but essentially all you need to understand is how the encoder works and how it provides protection for the files that the encoder encodes. once you know how the encoder works, then theres no problem to understand how this works. in short, you need to encode the files when creating a drupal application to use them in the web pages. you can either use the ioncube encoder or zend encoder. both the encoders can encrypt an application files and the encoders have nearly the same features. i would suggest you to use the ioncube encoder because they are free and open source , a feature that ioncube can not provide. the advantage is that with ioncube you can easily use any language which you want for your application. zend encoder is a single language only. but don't just select ioncube encoder right away, zend encoder is a powerful encoder and most capable way to encrypt an application.
