Customer Reviews: Introduction Offering high levels of security and stealth, the SetupGuard Anti-Tamper System will automatically encrypt and decrypt any files you need to create, remove or modify to prevent your PC from being modified or seized during the activation of a product. SetupGuard will also create the obfuscated name you require and protect your product against detection and deletion of the SetupGuard file that we provide. SetupGuard is simple to install and uninstall, requiring no knowledge of Windows or its files or registry. Also, SetupGuard will not leave a trace on your hard drive and doesn't require any modifications to your system. SetupGuard can encrypt just about any file, not just executable files. However, it does its best work with executable files because that is where the majority of attacks on your system occur. If SetupGuard is successfully installed and configured, you can use SetupGuard to encrypt and decrypt files that are normally unhidden and locked out of your system. SetupGuard will protect your product against detection and deletion of the SetupGuard file. How SetupGuard Works SetupGuard encrypts a file using a random key. During the encryption, all the contents of the file are scrambled in a way that will deter any software application, including malware and Trojan programs, from determining the content of the file. SetupGuard also obfuscates the file's name in such a way that a malicious program cannot determine the name of the file. The file's original name is stored in the encrypted file, so when SetupGuard is run to decrypt the file, it retrieves the original file's name from the encrypted file. Configuring SetupGuard Configuration of SetupGuard is very simple. When SetupGuard is installed, it will create a temporary SetupGuard folder. The SetupGuard folder is used to store your encryption keys. The SetupGuard folder is hidden 2edc1e01e8
