However, this arrangement is suitable for stationary bearing arrangements and does not lend itself for an arrangement suitable for a rotating element. EP 0 561 960 discloses a chucking arrangement in which a bearing ring arranged in a slot has a cooling channel running along the slot so that cooling air can flow through the slot. The primary object of this arrangement is to provide cooling of the bearing and, as a result, the arrangement is suitable for stationary bearing arrangements. However, the arrangement is not suitable for a rotating element. Less than two weeks before the presidential election, Republican nominee Donald Trump is still struggling to win over female voters. In the latest NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll, released on Friday, just 45 percent of women plan to vote for Trump, compared to 46 percent who plan to vote for Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton, the poll's headline showed. The percentage of likely voters that see Trump as "very" or "somewhat" qualified to serve as president is 11 percent lower than it was in the NBCWSJ poll, released last month, and 47 percent of female likely voters see Clinton that way, compared to just 19 percent of men. The gender gap has also remained stubbornly consistent throughout the course of the campaign: From July to October, Clinton's numbers have stayed at 43 percent and Trump's numbers at 40 percent. (Prior to that, Clinton held a 62 percent to 24 percent lead in the same poll, and since then, her lead has grown to 20 points or more in each poll.) According to the poll, women are still most concerned about the economy, terrorism, healthcare, immigration and the presidency of Barack Obama. They're least concerned about social issues, such as gun control, abortion, affirmative action and gay marriage. What was striking was that, according to the poll, Trump's gender gap was especially pronounced among those who identify as very religious — 56 percent of very religious women favored Clinton, compared to 23 percent for Trump. In 2012, Barack Obama won 44 percent of very religious women in the NBCWSJ poll. Clinton, for her part, leads among women who see the Supreme Court as a top
